DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Another small structure built close to the sidewalk is the second house north of Second Street on the west side of George Street.

The George Street facade is very plain, two bays wide, two stories tall with grey German siding and plain white trim. The windows have 3/1 sash. On the first story, beside the two windows is a center door with glazed upper half. On the south side of the asymmetrical 'A' roof is a large masonry chimney.

Behind the main portion of the house is a low two story wing with leanto on the south and west sides.

The building presents an attractive asymmetrical line in its gable as well as the fact that it is leaning to the south.

A brick path leads to the back of the building on the side south of the building.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Veal-Conrey House is an interesting element in the second block of George Street where most of the dwellings are small and built close to the street. It possesses a form which is unusual in Chesapeake City, with its assymetrical roof.

In 1893, Thomas Conrey paid one hundred and twenty five dollars for this lot. He probably had this house built from lumber from his sawmill as a rental property. Business men like Mr. Conrey tried to have work for their employees all year around. In the slack season he used these men to build houses on land he acquired around the town. By using lumber cut in his own mill, he kept costs at a minimum. This particular Conrey house remained in the Conrey estate until 1925 when the present owner bought it.

5. Description of physical appearance:

This small two story house with very low interior ceilings is estimated to have been built in the 1890's by Thomas Conrey with the ~~brick~~ addition added by Veal in the 1930's. It is of frame construction, positioned very close to George Street, and sitting mostly on the ground with separated piles of rocks serving as a foundation. A previous owner had covered the outside with yellow aluminum siding but the last owner removed the siding to reveal a mixture of weathered wooden siding underneath. Vestiges of paint exist but it has been a long time since it saw a paint brush. The windows and doors are in generally poor (rotted) condition but some of the sash may be reuseable even if the frames are not. The most unusual feature is the assymetrical front (1, 7) roof which is covered with a mixture of asphalt composition interlocking shingles and roll roofing.

The interior walls are drywall of late vintage which has been removed in some places to reveal badly deteriorated plaster underneath. (16)

There is a crumbling fireplace constructed from soft brick behind a partition in the living room (18) with a winding stair to one side (cont'd)

6. Statement of significance:

Typical of the working class residences in this 1800's canal town, this house is one of four side by side, on the west side of Geroge Street in the first block remaining south of the canal. It is the only one of the four not yet restored. As a group, all are residential, of similar wood frame construction, and are set very close to the street. Individually, two have front porches and two (including this one) do not and they open immediately onto the sidewalk. Each have evidence that wings and appendages were added at various times from whatever materials might have been available so the four are similiar in some aspects and individual in others -- forming a "microset" representation of the entire historic district.

The attached 1877 map shows a building located on this lot, but it is believed to be an earlier one inasmuch as the records indicate this one was built in the 1890's.
